

Future of the Site

Contributed by June Kaminski
Monday, 14 September 2009
Last Updated Monday, 14 September 2009

PLEASE JOIN IN THE BUILDING OF THIS SITE!

We did not receive the anticipated funding for future development of this site, but I still intend to work on it and encourage all educators interested in Aboriginal learning to join in! The learning resources will continue to grow, and hopefully, a community of practice can still emerge from the collaboration of dedicated educators who are driven by passion and dedication.

The learning resources will continue to grow, and hopefully, a community of practice can still emerge from the collaboration of dedicated educators who are driven by passion and dedication.

So, if you are wondering - yes, the intent for this site is still active and you are welcome to join in!

If I haven't gotten back to anyone who tried to communicate through the site, please forgive and resubmit your query/comments.

All My Relations,

June

June Kaminski, RN MSN PhD(c)
june- at- firstnationspedagogy.ca
<http://firstnationspedagogy.ca>

The ways of knowing, learning, and teaching inherent to the traditional methods of informal and formal aboriginal education are profound and important in this 21st Century. It is important that all First Nations peoples have access to education and health planning that is shaped by their own ancestral ways.